UK police officer killed in terror attack in London was a retired Gunner

The Guardian

The family of Keith Palmer, the police officer stabbed to death by a terrorist as he guarded the Palace of Westminster on Wednesday, have paid tribute to a "wonderful dad and husband" who was "dedicated to his job, brave and courageous." PC Palmer, 48, was married with a five-year-old daughter. His family said they were devastated by his death. He had joined the parliamentary and diplomatic protection command unit less than a year ago, but had been in the Met since 2001. READ MORE

Liberals' second budget leaves big questions on vets' pensions, defence spending

CTV News

The Liberals checked off many of their remaining promises to veterans in the federal budget, but left one big priority marked incomplete: Giving injured ex-soldiers pensions for life. And anyone who was hoping to see more money committed to the Canadian military was left disappointed as the government did precisely the opposite, delaying billions of dollars in planned spending for new equipment. Finance Minister Bill Morneau's new fiscal plan did include new spending for veterans and their families, which would cost the government $624 million over five years if everyone who was eligible accessed the services right away. READ MORE

More military veterans granted access to Perley Rideau

Ottawa Community News

The Perley Rideau is in celebration mode now that it has been given the green light to set aside 25 long-term care beds for those eligible military veterans who served after the Korean War. Just days before the recent announcement, seven veterans had been admitted to the long-term care home, with many more working through the application process. "I wouldn't be surprised if the 25 beds filled up pretty quickly," said Akos Hoffer, chief executive of the Perley and Rideau Veterans' Health Centre, located in Ottawa's Riverview Park neighbourhood. "It's an important first step and we'll see where we go from here. We're very pleased." READ MORE

Army recruiters are hoping new rules will make it easier than ever to join the local reserves. Fifty-five prospective recruits between the ages of 16 and 57 tried being a "soldier for a day" at an open house at the Philip L. Debney Armoury at 8403 Roper Road, learning how to march and stand in formation, navigate with a map and compass, how to deploy in a section during an assault and how to use a weapon. READ MORE

How Canada's bloodiest day at Vimy defined Great War sacrifice

Maclean's

In the end, it came down to a battalion of aggrieved Nova Scotians, mostly men from Cape Breton, to put the final seal on the Canadian army's most iconic victory and the bloodiest day in the country's military history. By 6:00 p.m. on April 9, 1917, Canadians and Germans had already been mowed down in their thousands across the heights of Vimy Ridge. Along the far right edge of the battlefield, Arthur Currie's 1st Division had swept along four kilometres of Vimy's most gentle terrain at a cost of 2,500 casualties, a dead or wounded man for every metre and a half. READ MORE

Bomb factories, village command posts: Islamic State's rural fight

Yahoo!

Islamic State fighters have pulled out of this deserted village on the Tigris river, which Iraqi commanders say was a crucial outpost defending their nearby stronghold of Mosul, but signs of their presence abound. As the sounds of battle echo in the distance, the stinking corpses of dead militants line a path from a home they used as a command post down to the river bank. An enormous cement plant nearby still contains dozens of rockets and booby-trapped car bombs, one of which killed sappers entering the facility recently. READ MORE
